

A Case of a Misunderstood Novice

Rex Stewart's earliest recordings – and a glimpse of an anonymous trombonist PART 2

Continuing after the sessions settled in Part 1 of this article we can now have a look at further sessions of 1924, attributed in the discos to Bubber Miley and affiliated musicians, but probably/possibly misidentified in the past. Most of the recently listed personnels on Ajax recordings – and other labels of 1923 to 1926 – come from Jim Kidd's interviews with Louis Hooper as documented in Record Research 77. But without any wish to diminish Kidd's and Hooper's efforts I feel unable to believe in everything Hooper said when identifying his co-musicians – or even himself. Hooper's recording activities for Ajax lasted from early (Feb.?) 1924 until late April/early May 1925. He was the pianist, and as is commonly the case among musicians, he may have been gifted with a good ear for players of his own instrument, but he probably did not care so much for players of the other instruments. Thus, where he names participating musicians of about four decades after the recordings, he mostly confines himself to Bubber Miley, Rex Stewart (later), Jake Frazier, Bob Fuller, Elmer Snowden and himself. He does not seem to have been an integral part of the Harlem jazz scene, although he also recorded for other labels, Vocalion among them. But he mainly worked as staff pianist and arranger for the Joe Davis Music Company. He came from Canada in 1921 and his stay in New York only lasted until 1928. His name is never mentioned when musicians recount events and experiences from their musical lives. Accordingly, in contrast to Jim Kidd's assertion elsewhere, I doubt his ability to distinctly discriminate different horn players or rhythm players after such a long time.

In this Part 2 of my article I am listing a couple of recording sessions involving Bubber Miley, Jake Frazier, Bob Fuller, and some other musicians - according to the discographies, but which in my opinion have the same trumpet/cornet player as on the Vocalion sides shown in Part 1: the early Rex Stewart. This realisation found a strong confirmation in Bruce Bastin, 'Never Sell A Copyright', p. 21: "The usual trio (Fuller, Hooper, Snowden – KBR) was employed but pianists Cliff Jackson and Arthur Ray were also used. Rex Stewart was used more than Bub Miley, according to (Joe) Davis, and Louis Metcalf also took part." Among only the Ajax recordings of 1924 I counted 16 entries for Miley, 7 entries for Metcalf, but only one for Stewart in the discos! For 1925 there are 7 entries for Stewart, one for Metcalf and none for Miley. Thus, my assumption that Stewart had been misidentified for Miley seems to be verified by the relation of listed 1924 recordings of Miley (16) to Stewart (8) when it probably should have been vice versa.

Bubber Miley played in a personal style derived from Johnny Dunn's "military" playing of the early 1920s. Miley copied Dunn's strong but stiff staccato notes, his triplet phrasing and his even eighth-notes. And Dunn's occasional growl notes, obviously blending them with what he had heard from King Oliver. When listening to his documented recordings of the time (e.g. the Texas Blues Destroyers), he is heard playing regular urgent notes with a clear and brilliant tone, but with a stiff and simple rhythm, far removed from "Western" off-beat phrasing.

Stewart, on the other hand, also uses part of Miley's phrasing, but with a coated tone and with much less rhythmic – i.e. stiff - accuracy. Instead he is much freer rhythmically and uses a much more flexible tone. Yet, it certainly is not surprising that he was mistaken for Miley in the Swedish Bubber Miley Discography of some years ago. But now, with the knowledge of their surprisingly similar styles of the time, it is much more important to find out who plays where in reality. My own knowledge of Stewart was always determined by Stewart's own account of his time with Henderson, telling us of his devotion and following to Armstrong. But from 'Boy Meets Horn' we know now that his earlier style owed much to Johnny Dunn, just as Bubber Miley's style did. His change of stylistic affiliation from a Miley/Dunn style to an Armstrong affected style should then be acknowledged in the time from late 1924 – when Armstrong appeared in New York - to late 1925/early 1926 when he was recommended by Armstrong as his successor to his chair in the Henderson band.

Furthermore, we hear a trombone player here with a distinct legato style – somewhat influenced by Charlie Irvis' style, yet not as distinct and not as harmonically firm and "classic" as Irvis – who is continually identified as Jake Frazier. But Jake Frazier had a staccato style on his instrument what can easily be detected when listening to his documented recordings (e.g. 'Jake's Weary Blues' Ajax 17117). At exactly the time of Stewart's sojourn with the Montague band, his band-mate, drinking buddy and trombone blowing partner was Herb Gregory, of whom he talks with highest praise. This phenomenon of blowing partners was common in Harlem at this period, other examples being Bubber Miley/Charlie Irvis, June Clark/Jimmy Harrison and Gus Aiken/Bud Aiken. And just because of the popularity of the Miley/Irvis couple it seems feasible that Rex Stewart teamed up with Gregory with his Irvis-like trombone style. Consequently, there certainly is a distinct possibility that the trombone player heard here might be Stewart's companion. Rex Stewart, 'Jazz Masters of the 30s', p.105: "In those days, a pair of brass men (trumpets and trombones) usually hung out as a team, eating and drinking and especially playing together. There were Bubber Miley and Charlie Irvis, Geechie Fields and Gus Aikens (sic), Jimmy Harrison and June Clark. My partner was a New Jersey trombonist named Herb Gregory. Tricky's trumpet buddy was Louis Metcalf." This trombone player heard here - and assumed to be Gregory - can only be detected on a short list of Ajax and Plaza recordings. He is not identified anywhere as a trombonist with his own personality, but he is clearly determinable as a distinct individual. He is not Jake Frazier – under whose name he is always listed – and nothing more is known of him than what Stewart recounts. A small number of further recordings of his exist, but without Rex Stewart's presence.

Below, I have not listed the generally acknowledged and accepted titles having Rex Stewart among their personnel.

This trumpet player is much more assured than Morris as listed in BGR and might well be Rex Stewart, considering my previous identification. I do not hear Thomas Morris, who is named by Louis Hooper in RR 77 and my listening companions share the same opinion. Yet, there are no growls and few Johnny Dunn elements pointing to Miley, but the frequent jumping trills lead me to Rex Stewart. In the light of the recordings discussed in part 1 of this article I dare to doubt Bob Fuller's presence here and would like to propose that of Cecil Benjamin, clarinetist of the John Montague band (see Part 1 of this article in N&N 84). Fuller's fast vibrato can not be detected here and this player uses a more Western style. Louis Hooper is doubtful. Rust*6 lists Edgar Dowell.

These three Edison sessions were completed on a single day by the Edison company and they certainly feature the same accompanying band and are thus not commented individually.

I would like to refer to Monette Moore's Vocalion session of 25 September 1924 where she is accompanied by members of the John Montague band: To my ears this is the same band, enlarged by the band's trombonist and an unknown banjo player. I believe strongly to recognize Rex Stewart and the band's clarinetist – Cecil Benjamin. Both men's interplay is comparable to that at the Vocalion sessions and the trombonist fits in perfectly. Therefore, and because of the temporal coincidence I opt for the members of the contemporaneous Montague band. Piano playing is more chordal and voluminous than Hooper's, and John Montague might possibly be present, together with a banjo player who definitely is not Elmer Snowden. (Rex Stewart does not report a banjo player for the Montague band, but a drummer instead.)

This probably is young Rex Stewart - not Miley - playing straight and sweet. Vibrato and tone certainly are his, and thus there is little doubt. Hooper probably is the pianist in this "beautiful" little waltz.

"This is Irving Berlin's famous composition All Alone, performed here as a waltz, as it was written the year before. The accompaniment is trumpet and piano only, despite the label credit to the Texas Trio. Dixon-Godrich list the trumpet player as B. Miley. The playing is very straight, which makes aural identification difficult, but we think it sounds more like Rex Stewart's tone, with the characteristic vibrato he had in the earlier years. In our opinion, Rex plays on all the other Monette Moore titles from January, 1925 to January, 1927, on which a trumpet is present."

What a wonderful Rex Stewart – after only listening for four months to Louis Armstrong in New York – with a much freer new phrasing. Great! And even Hooper is developing.

And then Bob Fuller with his dated clarinet playing, including this silly fast vibrato. But he, too, is developing. Unfortunately, he apparently had no New Orleans model to listen to. He is not a bad musician. He only did not recognize the evolution of jazz music and its direction.

I myself would probably not have identified Charlie Green here, and he certainly is difficult to determine. But a couple of his phrases and the overall sound make clear that this is Green as named in RR 77. His trombone playing showed a lot of different approaches depending on the musicians he worked with momentarily. He could be very crude and simple with singers and even brilliantly technical when with high class colleagues as on Henderson's Dixie Stompers session of April 6, 1928, where he is often mistaken for Jimmy Harrison.

The pianist might be Louis Hooper, but where is that banjo? It can definitely only be detected in the first title, and this player very probably is not Snowden as he does not play any arpeggios, trills or other gimmicks. He is a hard swinging and strong player and might be found among the likes of Buddy Christian.

I certainly do not believe that this unsecure trumpet/cornet player is Rex Stewart, although his name is given by Hooper, and thus listed everywhere. This player's tone is not as sharp as Stewart's, and the playing lacks Stewart's Miley oriented style or his developing Armstrong inclination. Guessing intuitively, I would opt for Thomas Morris.

Although Jake Frazier is not one of the most accomplished trombonists in the Harlem period, he is not as simple or primitive as this trombonist. At least he possesses a distinct style which cannot be detected here. Louis Hooper probably is the pianist.

Although Stewart and Miley have been listed as horn men, this trumpet player might possibly be the same man as on the session above (Helen Gross), but I would only opt for possibly Thomas Morris here. This player seems to be one of the second rank of trumpet/cornet players of whom dozens were performing in Harlem. He is much too tame to be Miley or Stewart. At exactly 1:08 min into 'Undertaker's Blues' I believe to hear a guitar answering the trumpet player's phrase, and there are instances (0:39 min and others) where I also feel I hear faint guitar noises. The sound of the piano seems to be very "silvery" on this title, what may be caused by the addition of a guitar. This "silver" sound is not on the second title. If we accept Elmer Snowden on tenor sax on the second title, he may be our man on guitar in the first one. Furthermore, I believe to hear a very soft saxophone with long held notes in the first title. This should be Fuller then.

On the second title we certainly have Bob Fuller on alto sax (Fuller's vibrato and strange phrasing!) and a very rudimentary tenor saxist, who is believed to be Snowden

Louis Hooper probably is the pianist.

Notes:

 - W. Bryant, Ajax Records: personnel per Hooper: 'Undertaker's Blues': Rex Stewart, cornet; Louis Hooper, piano; 'Black Sheep Blues': Bob Fuller (alto saxophone); Louis Hooper (piano). BGR lists a second saxophone, which it inexplicably attributes to banjoist Elmer Snowden.

 - Rust*6: Bubber Miley, c (1); Bob Fuller, as (2); Elmer Snowden, ts(2); Louis Hooper, p.
 - Bob Hitchens, Choo Choo Jazzers, VJM 176: prob Bubber Miley (t-1); poss Bob Fuller (cl-1, ss-2); prob Elmer Snowden (cmel); Louis Hooper (p). "Probably Miley (no vibrato), Rains agrees, Berresford is unsure. The ss is stylistically identical to that on the Get-Happy-Band session of 1 Sept. 1925. On 31847 there is a faint low register cl (Fuller?) throughout, apparently not wishing to be heard. Prob Snowden on cmel."

The afore mentioned trombonist – assumed to be Herb Gregory – might also be heard and recognized, but without the company of Rex Stewart, on the following recording sessions. But I have to emphasize that the identification of this distinct trombone player and the assumption of his identity is my own work and is based on Rex Stewart's written legacy and my own knowledge of trombone playing from studies in my early years.
